BIOGRAPHY

Empty Machines is a two-piece band hailing from Glasgow, Scotland, that originated as a solo instrumental project by Thomas Crawford in his home studio. After enlisting Jodie Helena as their vocalist, they established themselves as Empty Machines. With a DIY approach to their creative process, the band writes, records, and mixes all their music in their home studio, granting them complete control over their sound. Empty Machines' music, blends elements of alternative, electronic, and ambient genres, producing a cinematic and immersive wall of sound.

Last summer saw Empty Machines release their debut single, Luna, which was well received gaining positive reviews and national radio play. Luna was played on BBC Radio 1 on the BBC Introducing with Alyx Holcombe show, with Luna being described as “absolutely massive”, and “A cinematic Wall of Sound”.

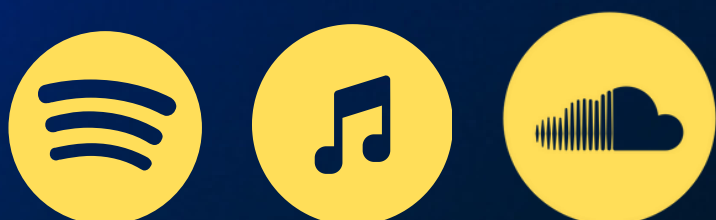

Empty Machines are now following up with their second single release named Velvet Sky, which promises to delve even deeper into their cinematic sound. Velvet Sky is an important song for listeners to further understand the band as Velvet Sky explores the darker themes of Empty Machines.

Velvet Sky will be released on all streaming platforms on 15/12/23.
